

The Global Migration & Refugee Crisis

Today more than 60 million persons worldwide have been forcibly displaced from their homes, the highest number in recorded history. Images of desperate refugee flows fill our media every day. This major humanitarian crisis is set to escalate further in 2016.

Join us for a Warburg Program panel discussion featuring experts who will explore answers to some of the key questions surrounding the crisis: What is driving this displacement?; Where are the displaced going?; What are host governments doing and how is the international community handling this crisis?

February 23, 2016 • 5:30–7:00 pm

Simmons College • Linda K. Paresky Conference Center

Panel Discussion Participants:

- Simon HENSHAW

Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary, Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, U.S. Department of State

- Noora LORI

Assistant Professor of International Relations, Boston University

- Kaija SCHILDE

Assistant Professor of International Relations, Boston University

- Denis SULLIVAN

Professor of Political Science and International Affairs & Co-Director of the Middle East Center, Northeastern University

Moderator: Ambassador (ret.) William M. BELLAMY

Warburg Professor in International Relations, Simmons College

Presented by the Warburg Program, Simmons College